Overview

Early Christians was written by Dr. Lisa Micheelsen, Ph. D. (Alberta), an expert in ancient religion, philosophy, history and culture. The course helps students to explore the identity, history and thought of the early Christians from the forces that shaped the birth of Christianity down to approximately the sixth century CE.

This is not so much a course on the development of doctrine or texts, but on who the early Christians were, what they practiced, how they lived, and how they came to formulate a religious identity. The course begins with the historical context, and considers the development of Jewish monotheism, history, and conflict with the Romans. It then discusses Roman historical, cultural, and religious factors, and from there explores the development of the religion that these two cultures together produced. We will explore not only the development of religious identity, but acceptance and persecution of those who affiliate themselves with it, and the eventual rise of Christianity as the official religion of the Roman Empire. Consideration will be given to the composition of key texts—their sources and social factors at work in their development—as well as controversial claims concerning “lost Christianities” and the idea that Christianity should be classified as a Roman mystery cult.
