Overview

This course introduces you to the distinctive and crucial contributions made by Canadian political economists to our understanding of Canada's political, economic, social, and cultural development. You will explore the historical development of the Canadian economy and engage in a critical examination of some of the methods, approaches, and issues central to the study of Canada and the global political economy. These topics include, but are not limited to, citizenship and immigration, resource dependency, the cultural industries, indigenous-state relations, urban transformation, welfare-state restructuring, health and education reform, precarious work, settler colonialism, political ecology, social inequality, and movements for social justice, especially in the era of emergent infectious diseases.

Outline

The course consists of three sections comprising a total of ten units.

Section 1: Canadian Political Economy in a Global Context: Theories and Approaches

- Unit 1: The 'New' Canadian Political Economy: An Overview
- Unit 2: Evolving Perspectives: Change and Continuity
- Unit 3: Globalization and Development

Section 2: Overview – Canadian Political Economy in Regional and Global Contexts

- Unit 4: Paradigm Shift: Global Neoliberalism
- Unit 5: Democracy and Development in Sub-National Contexts
- Unit 6: Settler Colonial Capitalism
- Unit 7: Urban Restructuring and Welfare State Transformation

Section 3: Overview – Capitalism and Contestation

- Unit 8: Health and Education Deform/Reform
- Unit 9: Precarious Work and Inequality

- Unit 10: Democratic Renewal and the Future(s) of Canadian and Global Political Economy

Learning outcomes

Upon completion of this course, you will be able to:

- Situate a description of current events in social, political, and economic history from the perspective of Canadian political economy.
- Have a working understanding of multiple state and non-state institutions that manage the global political economy.
- Apply concepts, research, and analytical skills of global political economy to contemporary issues and policy debates in Canada.
